The Coy company and Mrs. Welch naturally looked to the town authorities for the fulfillment of the arrivement, but were practically fold that the state highway denariment were responsible and the Store road was a state highway. The representatives of the state sared to the agreement.

Then the defendants in the present case placed an obstruction across the part of the highway that had been constructed through their land, and placed a sign forbidding trespassing, and most vehicles used the section of the original highway that was to have been abandoned.

Then the state interposed and the obstructions were ordered removed by the court and the order was respected. Next the case went to the supreme court as to the constitutionality of a law, but the settlement of a matter of agreement, and was turned back to the supreme court for adjustment. The next case assigned for trial at Westerly wend and was forbid for the law relating to the construction of highways. This court decided that the question at issue was not one of constitutionality of a law, but the settlement of a matter of agreement, and was turned back to the supreme court for adjustment.
